Mr. Harrington made the final appeal

Mr. Harrington made the final appeal in support of his resolution, after Mrs. L. C. Boynton of Cache county had argued against it. Mr. Harrington declared his belief that the convention should adopt the resolution and thus pledge the Republican party.

"The Democrats will follow us," he asserted. "Goodness knows they have nothing else for an issue."

His appeal fell on unheeding ears, however, and but a dozen to fourteen men stood up to be counted in support of the resolution.

Alma Eldredge then offered a resolution amending the platform in such a manner s to permit the next legislature to create railroad commission empowered to fix down. The only speech in opposition was made by Harry Joseph, who declared that the Republican party had trouble enough without taking up the railroad question. Mr. Eldredge had intended to speak in t had been defeated.

Three nominations were made for associate justice of the supreme court. J. M. Bowman, in a speech full of eloquence, named Judge J. E. Frick, Joseph Stanford of Weber put forward Captain E. T. Hulanski as a man possessing all human virtues, with experience in politics and for four years justice of the peace in Ogden. Benner X. Smith of Salt Lake nominated Judge Charles W. Morse of Salt Lake Mr. Smith described Judge Morse's high character and legal attainments and asserted that his popularity was such that he always ran ahead of his ticket when a candidate for office.

Then there came a volley of seconding speeches. J. J. Greenewald made a pathetic appeal for Judge Morse.

"Nominate him," he cried, "and help the Republican party in Salt Lake. We'll need help."

Then came the balloting. The first ballot resulted; Frick. 245; Morse, 196; Hulanski, Sl. As 264 votes were needed for a choice, another ballot was ordered and it resulted in the nomination of Frick by this vote: Frick, 274; Morse, 186; Hulanski, 61.

As soon as the result was announced there was cheering from the Frick partisans and a stampede for the exits ensued.

Colonel Squires warned the party, how-ever, that it must be vigilant and shake off its apathy. "The Democratic rooster is immertal, he declared.
